

SLEEP IN STREETS TO SEE DEAD KING

Thousands Pass the Night in Line Outside Westminster Hall.

EACH HOUR 6,000
PASS EDWARD'S BIER

Queen Mother Weeps When She Sees 100,000 Persons Massed
Outside the Palace Walls.

LONDON, May 13.—When the great doors of Westminster Hall were thrown open at 6 o'clock this morning, more than 100,000 persons were formed in a two-mile line, waiting for the opportunity to pass the bier of Edward VII, whose body is lying in state for the tributes of the people. Hundreds had kept all-night vigils for the sake of being in the van today.

Many who were disappointed last night, when the doors were closed, while thousands still waited to enter, had remained in line or near Westminster the night through.

They were a bedraggled, unkempt lot, to whom an all-night rain had added the last despairing touch. They had either leaned against friendly walls or sat on the curbs and dozed the night away. The police would not allow these people to use chairs, fearing they would clutter the street and interfere with the rush of people when the doors were reopened at 6 o'clock this morning.

Many of those who kept their weary vigil outside Westminster were overcome long before the hour that would have seen the reward for their sacrifice, and ambulances drove in and out of the throng all night.

Queen Mother Weeps.
The patience and suffering of these people greatly affected the Queen mother, and she wept when she saw the depth of their love for the dead monarch.

Hundreds of Americans today joined the procession that crept by the catafalque in steady ranks.

The shuffling masses, drawn from all classes of British society, took up their march through the historic hall at the rate of 500 an hour.

The coster from the east stood shoulder to shoulder with the prosperous broker; the flower girl of the streets became for the time the mistress of the upper middle class woman.

Only thirteen (13) days left.—Adv.

of leisure. For once the caste barriers of Britain were broken down, temporarily, at least—by sorrow for Edward the Beloved's death.

Hundreds of police lined the streets about, from Millbank on the Thames embankment, where the line was formed, eight abreast. St. James Park was lined with them. But there was little need. The silent crowds gave no hint of trouble. The sole danger lay in the crush.

Many Wear Mourning.
Many of the men and women were in mourning. Hundreds wept. The sight of the silent throngs flocking through the ancient hall, praying as they pass the guarded but simple catafalque, is one of the most impressive England has seen in a decade.

As the day wore on the crowds increased. The authorities prepared for a great jam late in the afternoon, when the working people would have opportunity to join the procession.

One of the principal topics among the thousands along the embankment today was the message from King George, in which he says he was much impressed by "the admirable manner with which everything connected with the day's beautiful ceremony was carried out, and declared that nothing could have been better than the quiet dignity of the tribute thus paid to the memory of his beloved father."

Peculiar to Itself

Hood's Sarsaparilla has No Equal as a Blood Medicine.

"I think there is no other blood medicine equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have a family of five little ones, and have used it every spring for twelve years. There is something about Hood's Sarsaparilla which other medicines lack. My husband was bothered with boils. He was so bad he could scarcely get around. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it cured him." Mrs. Lillian Dixon, Pike, Ohio.
